DUBOCHET’S VITRIFICATION METHOD

1. The sample is transferred to a metal mesh and excess material removed.

2. The sample forms a thin film across the holes in the mesh when it is shot into ethane at about -190°C.

3. The water vitrifies around the sample, which then is cooled by liquid nitrogen during the measurements in the electron microscope.

Illustration: ©Johan Jarnestad/The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences